APPRAISAL REVIEW - APPRAISAL REASONABLE/APPROPRIATENESS REVIEW

Consideration of the situation, appraisal techniques, influencing factors, evidence presented, etc.

- There are no unsupported assumptions
- There are no hypothetical conditions, except where necessary for a reasonable analysis of the property
- Valuation approach(es) are explained and supported
- Conclusions regarding highest and best use are well supported
- Adequate number of comparable sales are presented to draw conclusions about the value of land in a particular area
- Comparable sales are actually comparable to the subject property:
 - similar in size
 - same highest and best use
 - similar attributes such as access, services, view, waterfront, frontage, forested or farmland etc.
 - differences between the comparable sales and subject property must be explained and accounted for in an appropriate manner, e.g. quantitative and/or qualitative adjustment, ranking, weighting, etc.
 - Include a map/aerial imagery illustrating location and shape of each comparable
- Information is provided regarding the appraiser's qualifications, market knowledge and experience
- In the case of an update, provide explanation and/or evidence of what was done to verify that there were no material changes to the property since the original inspection, e.g. the property was revisited, the donor/recipient were interviewed, etc.
- Is the report a well written comprehensive account of the subject property and area? Or is it poorly written (copy and paste errors) and contains poor resolution maps or photocopied real estate and financial reports?
- Are the appraiser's conclusions reasonable? Do they make sense when you consider what you know about the subject property and the area it is located in? Do the conclusions follow naturally from what is written in the body of the report?
